Interview with Eddie Vestjens
Biographical Notes and Timed Summary

Background

Eddie Vestjens was a bus driver for ACTION from 1987 until 2010. He was born in a small town near Amsterdam in Holland in 1954. His family migrated to Australia in 1956 and came directly to Canberra where Eddie's Auntie was already living. Eddie's father got a job with the CSIRO working with wildlife and although he was not trained as a scientist his knowledge and experience were respected within and beyond the CSIRO during his long employment there.

Eddie had one sister, born in Australia in 1957. He went to school at St Mary's in Civic and then to St Bridget's in Davenport Street Ainslie when it opened in 1959. In 1963 he went to High School at Daramalan College in Dickson and left after completing year 12 in 1972.

Eddie's first work after school was as a labourer for a Sydney company putting in traffic lights in Canberra. After the company went broke he got a job at David Mackay's hardware store in Mort Street. After working there for about 18 months he began work at the Canberra Airport with TAA. He started as a baggage handler and then became a clerical worker in the cargo section. He left TAA after 13 years when he got a job as a bus driver for ACTION in 1987. After he was diagnosed with Depression in 2005/6, he worked part-time. He took a redundancy in 2009 at the age of 55.

Eddie married in 1977. He has two daughters and now lives with his second partner.

Eddie has had little sustained contact with his home country. He and his mother and sister lived there for a year in 1962 while his father worked for the CSIRO at Macquarie Island, and he decided at that time that he didn't like it. His father considered returning there in 1975 but largely due to Eddie's mother, he decided against it. Eddie's father died of lung cancer a few years later in 1979. A further tragedy for Eddie was his sister's suicide not longer after their mother's death in 2004.

After his mother's death Eddie discovered that her experience of migration was referred to in The Dutch down Under 1606-2006.

Eddie has had a passionate interest in flying since discovering the airport as a teenager riding his bike around Canberra. He learned to fly after leaving school and for some years had his own plane.

Eddie's interview records working for ACTION from just before ACT self government in 1989 through to the present. It covers changes in the management of ACT Transport and industrial changes including the move to Enterprise Bargaining and the diminishing role of the Transport Union in the workplace.

The interview took place at Eddie's home in Kaleen.
